They also give children the practice of reading and contrasting words with two different words for families, so it's a really great practice of sounding out words. As children find and color images according to the words that are written inside them, they get a valuable practice of thinking about reading words in both word families and vocal spelling patterns. Coloring makes fun too! I think these worksheets are a perfect addition to the morning work being vocal when I say it myself! And we have a few freebies for you to try for yourself if you want! Scroll down all the way to find them! Otherwise click here to buy them for just $5 per volume! Here is a link to Volume 1, and here is a link to Volume 2. All the words in these two worksheet sets are the same words as those given in sounds fun CD / DVD. I love that these two resources compliment each other so well! They also have the same words are also presented in Sounds Fun Voices Workbooks, Volume One and Two. (See below word list.) Here is the word list for the first and the first volume of the workbook! (But there's only one DVD!) Here's a word list for another volume of worksheets and another Sounds Fun workbook-but again there is only one Sounds Fun Vocal DVD! Sound spelling or vocality rule can even be taught by letting children watch or listen to DVDs! Of course, they can also be taught in the traditional way instead! For those who did not know, there are words that are shown in the upper left corner of sounds fun voices dvd when it plays. My class enjoyed singing a vocal song once performed, and then watching it again sound muted, reading the words together when they appeared on screen. (See below.) Sounds Fun DVD is the word family words in the left corner for kids to read the song playing! These are the same words that appear in worksheets, as well as audio sounds in phonics workbooks. So to introduce the worksheet, you really need to review the sounds of fun vocal songs that the worksheet focuses on. Then let them watch again the sound turned off as they practice reading words on the upper left side. These are workbooks that have the same words as voice coloring worksheets for Word families. Introduce voice-follow-up or rule to children. Practice reading words together in the worksheet. I use Sounds Fun Voice CD / DVD for this, but you could use any method, of course! There's a clip below for those who aren't familiar. If you have a DVD, let the kids read the words in the upper left after singing and dancing with the video. 2. Read the worksheet instructions for children aloud. Show me what to do with one or two examples. 3. found it easier for kids to find and highlight the words that they should color first, and then I could release them to relax and color. So, before I passed out the worksheets, first I modeled how they should find spelling patterns for each word and then underlined that word color shown in the worksheet. Then I removed my worksheet so they can't just copy mine, of course! If you work in small groups, let the children find and underline the target words first with the color. Then let them relax and paint in their spare time as you listen to them each try to read the words individually. 4. Write worksheets to remind children to find and highlight all target words with the correct color before color coloring. Children can put a colored dot or underline with different colors of words that do not match the target spelling pattern. Watch and correct the mistakes by highlighting before they start painting, as it is the easiest and least frustrating for kids to fix! 5. After finding each target word and correcting it, they may start to paint these words according to the instructions. You can let them check the words with you first before they start coloring. 6. If the target words are colored, they may color the remaining words in any other color or follow the instructions in the worksheet. It works well because some kids want to make rainbows out of some objects or paint them very carefully, and this should be done after the rest of the work is completed. 7. You may want to let children with special needs simply underline words with a specified color and do not require painting, etc. They can even put markers on the right words instead of using a pen or chalk. The thought process is the same, so it's up to you! These worksheets are designed to be a little open to end how much it needs to be filled out. This means that some kids who enjoy coloring may want to paint all the objects and have fun with them! Others may only want to find those that are part of a targeted spelling pattern and may have to cross the rest, etc. Feel free to distinguish your students if you see it well! I usually ask my students to work on it until the time is right, and then I turn it down. So even if they haven't quite done the rest of any other color words, it shouldn't matter. They can be done when the bell rings, if you don't want them to stop the whole thing. I hope you enjoy this resource and that it will be useful to you! They are now available on the website.
